Conclusion:

When parents were asked about college infrastructure and the facilities provided to students, average 57% parents described parent meeting as excellent approach, whereas average 22% and average 18% parents described activity as very good and good respectively in comparison to 3% parent described this meeting was not required.

When parents were asked about institute's teaching standard and professor's approach towards student, average 52% parents found their ward's performance excellent in comparison to average 27% and average 13% parents found performance very good and average respectively with 8% opinion to poor performance.

When parents were asked various value added courses taken in the college, average 77% parents rated our standards and approach as excellent in comparison to average 18% rated very good and average 3% rated standards average in comparison to 3% parent rated standards poor.

Engaging parents in their ward's education is a potentially important way of supporting better learning outcomes. Participating faculties and parents approached teacher-parent meetings with interest. They stated that such meetings were beneficial and considerably functional since it eliminates time-place dependence.

Findings present strong evidence that parents' involvement in institutional activities can have a significant positive effect on students' learning. In the short term, better performing students benefitted more from the program; but over time, as more meetings organized gradually the low-performing students too began to benefit. As joint efforts, parents agreed to keep a close vigilance on the actions of their child, and to keep in constant touch with the counselors.
